ABSTRACT: In order to be granted asylum in the democratic countries where they escape from China, refugees of The Church of Almighty God should prove that they have a “well-founded fear” that, should they return to China, they would be persecuted. In some countries, the debate focuses on the interpretation of article 300 of the Chinese Criminal Law, which imposes jail penalties on those active in groups persecuted as xie jiao (“heterodox teachings,” sometimes translated as “cults”). Chinese embassies often inform authorities abroad that article 300 is only enforced against members of xie jiao who commit serious crimes. However, a study of the official interpretive documents and of 200 cases of members of The Church of Almighty God sentenced in China supports the conclusion that normal religious activities, such as attending worship services, trying to convert friends and relatives, or distributing religious literature are among the “crimes” punished under article 300 with severe jail penalties.

Introduction

These are difficult times for religious freedom. As more countries turn back from democracy and the rule of law, or refuse to accept the principle of the rule of law altogether, attacks on freedom of religion and belief are increasing. The greatest offenders are China and Russia, but many other nations are also exhibiting limitations on religious freedom, or other conditions that result in believers wanting to flee. This has caused many believers to become refugees, with increasing numbers seeking asylum in various democratic nations.

Under both international conventions, to which almost all democratic countries subscribe, and national laws such as the U.S. Immigration and Nationality Act, the applicant in an asylum case must prove:

1) a well-founded fear of persecution or that he or she has suffered past persecution;

2) that race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group or political opinion was or will be (if removed) the central reason for the persecution;

3) if the above criteria are demonstrated, then asylum should be granted in the exercise of discretion.

This article focuses on China, and one particular religious group, The Church of the Almighty God (CAG), a Christian new religious movement established in 1991, which teaches that Jesus has returned to earth incarnated as a Chinese woman (currently living abroad), who brings the final truth and the opportunity of eradicating our sinful nature. The theology of the CAG (see Introvigne 2020) is outside the scope of this article, as is the situation of other groups persecuted in China.

We focus on the fact that CAG members suffer severe persecution in China and, as such, are entitled to protection as refugees abroad. The CAG claims that, before December 2018, over 400,000 CAG members were arrested because of such basic religious activities as attending gatherings, keeping religious books at home, or engaging in missionary activities. Many were tortured, and there are claims that more than 110 CAG members died while in custody or as a consequence of persecution (The Church of Almighty God 2019). While it is impossible to confirm these figures independently, frequent references in Chinese media to hundreds of CAG members arrested in one or another province make them believable (Introvigne 2020).

It is worth noting that, although the CAG is the most persecuted Christian new religious movement in the history of Communist China, the campaign against it is not unprecedented. The waves of arrests and persecution against non-Christian religious movements, such as Yiguandao in the 1950s and Falun Gong after its clash with the Chinese regime in 1999 were of comparable magnitude and ferocity (see below for Yiguandao; for the context, see Ownby 2016). The persecution of Falun Gong has been studied by one of the authors (Edelman and Richardson 2003; Richardson and Edelman 2004; Edelman and Richardson 2005) and, although the theologies are obviously very different, can be compared to the repression of the CAG both in its scope and gory details (see Tong 2009, and the review of his book by Richardson 2010). It also, like CAG, generated waves of refugees who fled to democratic countries.

As of August 15, 2019, over 5,500 CAG members have escaped China and sought asylum in nearly two dozen countries. The largest number is in South Korea (1,010), followed by U.S. (about 1,000), Italy (845), Spain (517), France (444), Saipan (326), Germany (310), Japan (276), Canada (255), and Australia (233). Only 10% (588) have been granted asylum so far, and 1,954 have been rejected, with 511 receiving deportation orders (although only a few have actually been deported).

The success rate of their applications varies greatly by country. Canada has granted 184 out of 255 requests, followed by Italy with 133 out of 845, Germany with 64 out of 310, New Zealand with 53 out of 62, Finland with 37 out of 39. If we look at percentages, the most favorable countries are Finland (95%), New Zealand (85%), Sweden (7 out of 9, or 78%), and Canada (72%).

The lowest percentage countries with large number of applicants are South Korea (1,010) and Japan (517), where no application has been accepted and the majority has been rejected. No application has been accepted in Spain either (482), and an estimated 2% only in the United States, but these countries have respectively zero and one case of rejection, the main problem for obtaining the protection quickly there being that interviews are scheduled years after the applications are filed. As for formal rejections, South Korea has 689, France 406, Italy 332, and Germany 242. The actual departure orders total 511: France has issued 236, South Korea 183, Netherlands 27, Switzerland 25, Germany 14, Belgium and Canada 11 each. In fact, only 9 CAG refugees have been deported: 3 respectively from Switzerland and Canada, 2 from Germany, and one from Sweden (Introvigne 2020).

There are several different reasons why applications are rejected, discussed by one of the authors in a previous article (Šorytė 2018). Here, we analyze only one reason of rejection, which is often quoted by South Korean courts (but also by the Court of Milan, in Italy: see Calvani 2019), i.e. the claim that reports that the CAG is persecuted in China are grossly exaggerated and, while it is true that the CAG is banned in China, penalties for its members are mild.

This is contrary to what international reports on religious freedom by global institutions have to say about the CAG. For example, the U.S. Department of State Report on International Religious Freedom for the year 2018, published on June 21, 2019, mentioned claims that in the year 2018 only, Chinese "authorities arrested 11,111 of its [CAG] members," and "subjected 525 of its members to ‘torture or forced indoctrination,’” adding that some were tortured to death while in custody (U.S. Department of State 2019b). The U.S. Department of State Report on Human Right Practices for 2018 also mentioned that “members of the Church of Almighty God [...] reported systematic torture in custody” (U.S. Department of State 2019a). The USCIRF (U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom) similarly reported that “in 2018, the Chinese government harassed and arrested thousands of followers of ...the Church of Almighty God. Many of those detained during the year... suffered torture and other abuses, in some cases resulting in deaths or unexplained disappearances while in custody” (USCIRF 2019, 40). The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner of Human Rights, summarizing NGOs submissions at the 2018 Universal Periodic Review of China, mentioned that “during 2014–2018, the Chinese Communist Party’s monitoring, arrest, and persecution had caused at least 500,000 Church of Almighty God (CAG) Christians to flee their home, and several hundred thousand families had been torn apart” (United Nations Human Rights Council 2018).

Why, thus, is the persecution doubted by some authorities? One reason is that groups persecuted as xie jiao, such as the CAG, are confused with other forms of illegal religion, which are at least occasionally tolerated in China. The expression xie jiao is translated in Chinese official documents into English as “cults” or “evil cults.” The translation, however, is misleading, and is connected to an attempt to argue that the problem of “cults” is not only Chinese, but international. In fact, the notion of xie jiao was born in the Ming period, and a more correct translation is “heterodox teachings.” The Ming preoccupation with xie jiao was rooted in a century-old tradition of Chinese millenarian movements trying to overcome the governments. While some of them posed very real threats to the Empire, others were outlawed based on a variety of political and religious consideration. What teachings were “heterodox” was determined by the Emperor, and lists of xie jiao were based on both theological and political grounds. For example, Christianity as a whole was classified as a xie jiao in 1725, but no longer regarded as such after 1842, due to Western political and military pressure (Goossaert and Palmer 2011, 27–31).

The Republican and Communist governments inherited this old notion and policy. The category of xie jiao was used both in Taiwan, during the Martial Law period (and beyond), and in Mainland China in the 1950s for the now forgotten massive persecution of Yiguandao, a large Chinese non-Christian new religious movement, which in fact became the model for the subsequent repression of other groups. In the campaign against the xie jiao of 1953–1954, largely directed against Yiguandao, according to police reports, 820,000 “leaders and organizers,” and 13 million followers were arrested or otherwise persecuted (Shao 1997, 452–55). Yiguandao was thus almost eradicated in Mainland China.

Xie jiao, however, was not the main term used during these campaigns. As David Palmer has noted, the CCP preferred to define the persecuted groups as “reactionary secret societies” (fandong huidaomen) or “feudal secret societies” (fengjian huidaomen), labels which reflected Mao Zedong’s (1893–1976) idea that actually some secret societies had played in Chinese history a progressive rather than reactionary role. Huidaomen was also used to emphasize that banned groups, although they might use the mask of religion, were not “really” religious, were similar to organized crime, and remained outside the area of religious liberty theoretically guaranteed by the Chinese Constitution (Palmer 2012, 113–34).

However, xie jiao came back as the most used term in the 1990s. Hong Kong scholars David Palmer and Edward Irons believe that a return to the prevalence of the label xie jiao, which was again preferred to huidaomen, was determined by the CCP’s attempt to elicit the sympathy of both those opposed to “cults” in the West and the mainline Christian churches, which feared the competition of new religious movements they regarded as heretical (Palmer 2012; Irons 2018).
Although the first group to be declared a xie jiao was the Shouters, a Christian movement, in 1983, a systematic theory of the xie jiao as “evil cults” emerged only with the incidents of the late 1990s that persuaded the CCP that Falun Gong was a dangerous competitor and a mortal enemy.

This generated the inclusion of a new crime, “organizing or using a xie jiao to sabotage the implementation of law,” in the Chinese Criminal Law in 1997, the creation of a special security agency called Office 610 (from the date of its establishment, June 10, 1999) for dealing with the xie jiao, and the establishment throughout China and in some centers of the Chinese diaspora abroad of branches of a Chinese Anti-Xie-Jiao Association (again, called in English “Chinese Anti-Cult Association”), directly connected with the CCP. When these measures came into effect, the old practice of compiling official lists of xie jiao had already been revived, with the first national list published in 1995 (Irons 2018).

In 2018, it was officially announced by the CCP that the central Office 610 and the “Central Leading Anti-Xie-Jiao Group” will be disbanded and their functions absorbed into the CCP Central Political and Legal Affairs Commission, as well as the Ministry of Public Security. According to Irons, this signaled that more, rather than less, efforts at eradicating the xie jiao will be required from the law enforcement structure by the CCP’s highest leadership in the future (Irons 2019).

Legal Background

All the three authors have filed affidavits in cases concerning CAG refugees. We have argued that, apart from any factual reports about the persecution, the fact that being a member of the CAG in China means living in a “well-founded fear of persecution” is demonstrated by Chinese law itself.

One may object that the Chinese Constitution affirms the principle of religious liberty. However, article 36 of the Constitution of the People’s Republic of China states that only “normal religious activities” are permitted and protected by the State. The devil is in the detail: yes, religion is constitutionally protected, but no, religion is not protected if the CCP perceives it as not “normal.” In China, whether a religion is normal or not is ultimately determined by the CCP.
There is no positive definition in Chinese law of what a “normal” religion is, or should be. The CCP may label any religious group it doesn’t approve of as “abnormal.” There are, however, quite a few negative definitions and examples of religions, or organizations claiming to be religious, that are not “normal,” and consequently fall outside of the Constitutional protection of religion.

One source is article 36 of the Constitution itself. It lists four categories of prohibited religious activities, which are thus regarded as not “normal”:

— religious activities that “disrupt public order”;
— those that “impair the health of citizens”;
— attempts to “interfere with the educational system of the state”;
— operating a religious body or carrying out religious activities “subject to any foreign domination.”

Although there are several laws dealing with religions that are not “normal” in China, article 300 creates a separate category. The groups banned as xie jiao are not regarded as religious, but as “pseudo-religions” hiding anti-government and anti-social activities behind the mask of religion. While other religions may argue that they do not really fall into the four categories of prohibited religious activities mentioned in article 36 of the Constitution, for those listed as xie jiao the case is already judged.

This has been disputed by a State Attorney of the Immigration Office in Korea, objecting to an affidavit by one of the authors (Richardson), and arguing, on the basis of information received from the Chinese Embassy, that,

According to article 27 of Public Security Administration Punishments Law of the People’s Republic of China, if the activity is not as severe as article 300 in the Criminal Law, but contains organizing, instigating, threatening, inducing or inciting others to engage in activities of xie jiao or secret societies, those that use xie jiao, secret societies or superstitions to disturb social order and jeopardize other people’s health, will be detained for 10 to 15 days and fined less than 1000 Yuan; those whose offenses are lighter, they will be detained for 5 to 10 days and fined less than 500 Yuan. (Reference 4. Article 27 of Public Security Administration Punishments Law of the People’s Republic of China).

Regarding the application of article 300 of the Criminal Law, the Supreme People’s Court and the Supreme People’s Procuratorate have made specific interpretation of it. (Reference 3. Interpretation of the Supreme People’s Court and the Supreme People’s Procuratorate on several questions of the applicable laws to handling criminal cases such as organizing and using cult organizations to undermine law enforcement.) The INTERPRETATION stipulates the details of application of article 300: organizing and using xie jiao organizations etc. to attack state agencies and enterprises; illegal congregation and protests; inciting members to attack public venues; inducing others to commit suicide or hurt themselves; raping women by means such as seduction and threats; cheating people out of their money; inciting state separation and subversion of state power; etc.

The laws of China and their execution are not punishing the faith of xie jiao members, but rather the anti-society activities born out of their faiths. The degree of the penalty also varies based on the type and amount of their activity. Therefore, if one only believes in a xie jiao, but does not engage in any activity of leading other people or actively participates in preaching, and if he/she does not commit any crime, he/she cannot possibly become a target of suppression without any reason.

This interpretation of article 300 is outdated and partial at best, and reflects intentional misleading by the Chinese Embassy at worst. It is certainly true that if one simply “believes” in certain religious doctrines but “does not engage in any activity,” does not participate in any gathering, and does not tell anybody about the belief, even China has no way of detecting and punishing a crime. Chinese surveillance technology is very advanced, but does not yet extend to scrutinizing thoughts. However, being compelled to believe silently, in fear of being arrested in case of “engaging in any activity” such as attending a prayer meeting or sharing the faith with relatives and friends, constitutes precisely the “fear of persecution” mentioned by international and domestic refugee laws.

As we will demonstrate through a study of the law, the official documents interpreting it, and the judged cases, the main legal provision typically applied against whomever is “engaged in an activity” connected with a xie jiao, and certainly of the CAG, is indeed article 300 of the Criminal Law (very rarely article 27 of the Public Security Law), and article 300 punishes as “crimes” activities that are the most typical forms of exercise of religious liberty, including gathering for worship, preaching, and even keeping religious books at home.

The Story of Article 300

It is worth noting that Article 300, introduced in 1997, has been amended in 2015. Most unfortunately, several court decisions throughout the world quote the version of 1997, ignoring the amendment. In the 1997 version, article 300 mandated that,

Whoever organizes and utilizes superstitious sects, secret societies, and evil religious organizations [xie jiao] or sabotages the implementation of the state’s laws and executive regulations by utilizing superstition is to be sentenced to not less than three years and not more than seven years of fixed-term imprisonment; when circumstances are particularly serious, to not less than seven years of fixed-term imprisonment.

Whoever organizes and utilizes superstitious sects, secret societies, and evil religious organizations [xie jiao] or cheats others by utilizing superstition, thereby giving rise to the death of people is to be punished in accordance with the previous paragraph.

Whoever organizes and utilizes superstitious sects, secret societies, and evil religious organizations [xie jiao] or has illicit sexual relations with women, defraud money and property by utilizing superstition is to be convicted and punished in accordance with the regulations of articles 236, 266 of the law (Permanent Mission of the People’s Republic of China to the United Nations and Other International Organizations in Vienna n.d.).

However, Amendment IX to the Criminal Law of the People’s Republic of China was adopted at the 16th Session of the Standing Committee of the 12th National People’s Congress on August 29, 2015, and came into force on November 1, 2015. Amendment IX reformulated several articles of the Criminal Law, including Article 300, as follows:

Whoever organizes or utilizes any superstitious sect, secret society, or cult organization [xie jiao] or uses superstition to sabotage the implementation of any law or administrative regulation of the state shall be sentenced to imprisonment of not less than three years but not more than seven years in addition to a fine; if the circumstances are especially serious, be sentenced to imprisonment of not less than seven years or life imprisonment in addition to a fine or forfeiture of property; or if the circumstances are minor, be sentenced to imprisonment of not more than three years, criminal detention, surveillance or deprivation of political rights in addition to a fine or be sentenced to a fine only.

Whoever organizes or utilizes any superstitious sect, secret society, or cult organization [xie jiao] or uses superstition to cheat any other person, which leads to the person’s serious injury or death shall be punished in accordance with the provisions of the preceding paragraph.

Whoever also commits the crime of raping a woman or swindling any person of his or her property while committing a crime as mentioned in paragraph 1 shall be punished according to the provisions on the joinder of penalties for plural crimes (“Amendment IX to the Criminal Law of the People’s Republic of China” 2015).
What mostly changed between the 1997 and the 2015 versions were the harsher penalties for “organizing and/or using a xie jiao.” In 1997, they were “not less than three years and not more than seven years of fixed-term imprisonment; when circumstances are particularly serious, not less than seven years of fixed-term imprisonment.” The 2015 version mentions “not less than three years but not more than seven years in addition to a fine” for the average cases. In the worst, most “serious” cases, however, the penalty will be “not less than seven years or life imprisonment in addition to a fine or forfeiture of property.” However, when “the circumstances are minor,” one can escape with “imprisonment of not more than three years, criminal detention, surveillance or deprivation of political rights in addition to a fine or be sentenced to a fine only.” On the one hand, life imprisonment appears for the first time in 2015, raising the ceiling of the statutory penalty, escalating the punishment, and including additional penalties, such as fines and the forfeiture of property. On the other hand, even “minor circumstances” in the “use” of a xie jiao are now classified under the category of criminal offenses, enlarging the scope of criminal law (although “minor circumstances” warrant lesser penalties). Provisions in the 2015 version cover the full scale of penalties (with the exception of the death penalty), applicable to members of groups listed as xie jiao.

The new formulation solves the problem raised by some Italian judges, who objected that refugees reporting that they were sentenced to less than three years under article 300 were lying, since the minimum penalty is three years. But in fact, the minimum penalty was three years in the 1997 version, while provisions under the 2015 version explicitly state that it is possible to be sentenced to jail terms shorter than three years when circumstances are “minor.”

We will discuss here only the first paragraph of article 300, punishing those who “organize or use a xie jiao.” The cases of homicides, theft or rape connected with a xie jiao do not concern any of the several hundred cases of CAG refugees we have examined. They are not wanted in China for sexual abuse or homicide, only for “using” a xie jiao. One of the authors has dealt elsewhere with accusations that members of the CAG killed a woman in a McDonald’s diner in 2014 in China, concluding these are false and the homicide was committed by a different religious movement (Introvine 2017; Introvine 2018; Introvine and Bromley 2017). At any rate, CAG asylum seekers are not personally accused of any violent crimes.
Would the Real Article 300 Please Stand Up?

The formula “organizing and using a xie jiao to sabotage [or ‘undermine’] the implementation of the law,” routinely used in Chinese decisions, may be misleading in democratic countries. “Sabotage the implementation of the law” may evoke some grandiose anti-government plans. In fact, “sabotaging the implementation of the law,” as interpreted by the CCP, simply means here not respecting Chinese law, and Chinese law includes a prohibition to be active in any capacity in a xie jiao.

Happily, detailed examples were supplied by an official interpretation of 2017, and there are also significant cases further clarifying the issue. In some Korean refugee cases, it was argued that precedents are not binding under Chinese law. While this conclusion is questionable, what we will try to show here is that article 300 is consistently interpreted in the same way by Chinese courts, and that this corresponds to official and binding interpretive documents.

The “Supreme People’s Court and Supreme People’s Procuratorate Interpretation on Several Issues Regarding the Applicable Law in Criminal Cases such as those of Using Xie Jiao to Sabotage the Implementation of Law” was passed on January 4, 2017 by the 1706th session of the Adjudication Committee of the Supreme People’s Court, and on December 8, 2016 by the 58th meeting of the 12th session of the prosecutor’s committee of the Supreme People’s Procuratorate. It was promulgated on January 25, 2017, and took effect on February 1, 2017.

Since previous interpretive documents are still quoted in decisions about refugees, it is important to note that article 16 clarifies that,

The “Supreme People’s Court and Supreme People’s Procuratorate Interpretation on Several Issues Regarding the Specific Application of Law in Criminal Cases of Organizing or Exploiting Cults to Commit Crimes” (Legal Interpretation [1999] No. 18), the “Supreme People’s Court and Supreme People’s Procuratorate Interpretation on Several Issues Regarding the Specific Application of Law in Criminal Cases of Organizing or Exploiting Cults to Commit Crimes II” (Legal Interpretation [2001] No. 19), and the “Supreme People’s Court and Supreme People’s Procuratorate Explanation on Several Issues Regarding the Specific Application of Law in Criminal Cases of Organizing or Exploiting Cults to Commit Crimes” (Legal Release [2002] No. 7) are abolished simultaneously (Supreme People’s Court and Supreme People’s Procuratorate 2017: we use the translation of the reference indicated, but have corrected some typos and systematically replaced “cults” with “xie jiao”).

Article 1 deals with the old problem how to define a xie jiao, stating that Unlawful organizations established falsely in the name of a religion, Qigong, or other things, that deify or aggrandize their ringleaders, and use methods such as the production and dissemination of superstitious fallacies to beguile and deceive others, developing and controlling members, and endangering society, shall be designated as “xie jiao” as used in article 300 of the Criminal Law.

Edward Irons has demonstrated that this formula, which already existed in previous documents, does not solve the definition problem. In practice, it is a xie jiao whatever movement the authorities decide to list as a xie jiao (Irons 2018). If anything, one can argue that in recent years being included in the official list of the xie jiao is sufficient to fall under the provision of article 300 but is not necessary. Article 300 has been applied, for example, against the Jehovah’s Witnesses, which are not listed as a xie jiao (ChinaAid 2019).

Article 2 is the most important part of the document, as it gives detailed practical examples of circumstances that are not “minor”:

In any of the following situations, those organizing or exploiting xie jiao to undermine the implementation of State laws or administrative regulations, shall be given between three- and seven-years imprisonment and a concurrent fine, in accordance with the first paragraph of Criminal Law article 300:

1. Establishing a xie jiao, or after a xie jiao has been shut down, restoring it, or establishing a separate xie jiao;
2. Assembling to surround, attack, forcibly occupy, or cause a commotion at State organs, enterprises, public institutions, or in public venues or religious activity sites; disrupting social order;
3. Illegally holding assemblies, protests, or demonstrations, disrupting social order;
4. Using violence, coercion or other means to compel others to join or to prevent others from leaving the xie jiao;
5. Organizing, instigating, or deceiving members or others into not performing legally prescribed obligations;
6. The use of ‘fake hotspots’, ‘pirate radio’ or other wireless platforms (stations) or wireless frequencies to promote xie jiao;
7. Engaging in xie jiao activities again, after having been previously criminally prosecuted, or having been given an administrative punishment in the last two years, for xie jiao activities;
8. Recruiting 50 or more xie jiao members;
Would the Real Article 300 Please Stand Up?

(9) Amassing assets or causing economic harms in the amount of 1,000,000 RMB or more.

(10) Using currency as a medium to promote xie jiao, where the volume is 500 or more bills (items);

(11) producing or transmitting xie jiao propaganda, reaching any of the following measurement standards:

1. 1,000 or more copies (pages) of flyers, spray paintings, images, slogans, or newspapers;
2. 250 or more books or journals;
3. 250 or more audio tapes, video tapes or other A/V materials;
4. 250 or more logos or emblems;
5. 100 or more Discs, USB drives, memory cards, portable hard drives, and other mobile storage media;
6. 50 or more banners or streamers.

(12) Exploiting communications information networks in any one of the following situations:

1. Produced or transmitted 200 or more digital images or articles; 50 or more digital books, periodicals, or A/V items; or a digital archive of 5,000,000 or more characters, or 250 minutes or more of A/V materials.
2. Distributed information or made phone calls 1,000 times or more.
3. Exploiting online chatrooms reaching 1,000 or more people cumulatively, or exploiting communications groups or social media such as Weixin or Microblogs accounts with 1,000 or more cumulative group members or followers, to promote xie jiao;
4. Where xie jiao information has actually been clicked or viewed 5,000 or more times;

(13) Other situations of serious circumstances.

In our study of the relevant cases, we will see the number of books or videos found in the possession of CAG members mentioned in several decisions. Those determining harsh penalties are not very high. 1,000 flyers or 250 copies of a magazine is what somebody engaged in a religious missionary activity would normally carry or keep at home. And, as we shall see from the cases, “illegally holding assemblies ... to disrupt the social order” is consistently applied to CAG worship meetings in private homes.

Article 3 explains when the jail penalty may go beyond seven years,
In any of the following situations, those organizing or exploiting xie jiao to undermine the implementation of State laws or administrative regulations, shall be found to be “especially serious circumstances” as used in the first paragraph of Criminal Law article 300, and given 7 or more years imprisonment or indefinite detention, and given a concurrent fine or confiscation of assets:

(1) Carrying out the acts provided for in items (1)-(7) of article 2 of this Interpretation, where the threat to society is especially serious;

(2) Carrying out the acts provided for in items (8)-(12) of article 2 of this Interpretation, where the volumes reached are 5 times or more those provided for in article 2;

(3) Other situations where the circumstances are especially serious.

Apart from the references to the volumes, meaning e.g. that distributing 5,000 flyers carries a minimum penalty of seven years, there is a large margin left to the courts, since what circumstances are “especially serious” is not explained.

While article 2 has a long list of circumstances that are not minor, article 4 is not very detailed on what circumstances are minor:

In any of the following situations, organizing or exploiting xie jiao to undermine the implementation of State laws or administrative regulations, shall be found to have “more minor circumstances” as provided for in the first paragraph of Criminal Law article 300, and be given up to three years imprisonment, short-term detention, controlled release, or deprivation of political rights, and/or a concurrent fine:

(1) Carrying out the acts provided for in items (1)-(7) of article 2 of this Interpretation, where the threat to society is more minor;

(2) Carrying out the acts provided for in items (8)-(12) of article 2 of this Interpretation, where the volumes reached are 1/5 or more than those provided for in article 2;

(3) Other situations of more minor circumstances.

Every CAG member would be glad to escape with a fine only. This may theoretically happen, for instance if one is lucky enough to be arrested after having distributed 200 flyers only rather than 1,000 (provided others are not found in the suspect’s home). But in fact, it happens very rarely. There are refugees, normally very young, who report having served terms shorter than three years before fleeing China. But they are the exception rather than the rule.

Articles 5, 6, and 15 confirm the obsession with numbers of flyers, books, or CDs possessed or distributed, and establish a quite byzantine system:

(5) Where, for the purpose of their transmission, xie jiao propaganda pieces in numbers reaching the standards provided in article 2, item (4) of this Interpretation are possessed.
or carried, or are seized on the spot in the process of being transmitted; it is to be handled in accordance with the following distinct situations:

1. Where the propaganda was produced by the perpetrator, it is handled as a completed crime;

2. Where the propaganda was not produced by the perpetrator, it is handled as criminal preparations;

3. Where propaganda not produced by the perpetrator is seized in the course of transmission, it is handled as an inchoate crime (attempt);

4. Where the propaganda was not produced by the perpetrator, and a portion was already transmitted, it is handled as a completed crime, and the non-transmitted portion may be considered at sentencing, based on the circumstances.

(6) Where several instances of producing or transmitting \textit{xie jiao} propaganda, or using communications information networks to promote \textit{xie jiao}, have not yet been handled, the quantities or amounts are calculated cumulatively.

Where producing or transmitting \textit{xie jiao} propaganda, or using communications information networks to promote \textit{xie jiao}, involves different types or forms, they may be calculated cumulatively after converted according to the ratios of different volume amounts provided in this interpretation.

(15) Where it is difficult to determine whether items involved with a case are \textit{xie jiao} propaganda, public security organs at the municipal level or higher may be commissioned to make a determination opinion.

Articles 7 and 11 to 14 deal with the case of \textit{xie jiao} activities causing “serious injuries or death,” instigating to suicide, or otherwise leading to the commission of major crimes. A reference to attempting “self-immolation” in article 12 echoes accusations against Falun Gong, although self-immolation protesting the lack of religious liberty is mostly practiced by Tibetan Buddhists, who are not members of a \textit{xie jiao}. Article 10 recommends severe punishments for those who, by using a \textit{xie jiao}, also promote “separatism,” but again charges of separatism are normally filed against Tibetan Buddhists and Uyghur and other Xinjiang Muslims, whose religions are not considered \textit{xie jiao}.

Article 8, on the other hand, may be applied to the CAG and to other “uses” of a \textit{xie jiao} through normal missionary activities, imposing harsh penalties:

In any of the following situations, perpetrating the conduct in articles 2-5 of this Interpretation is to be given a heavy punishment:

(1) Colluded with foreign institutions, organizations, or personnel to engage in \textit{xie jiao} activities;
(2) Established xie jiao institutions, developed membership, or organized xie jiao activities across provinces, autonomous regions, or directly governed municipalities;

(3) Assembling to cause trouble and openly conducting xie jiao activities in important public venues, supervisory areas, on major State holidays or during major events;

(4) Continuing to assemble to cause trouble and openly conducting xie jiao activities after a xie jiao has been shut down or been designated as a xie jiao;

(5) State employees engaged in xie jiao activities;

(6) Promoting xie jiao to minors;

(7) Promoting xie jiao in schools or other educational and training institutions.

For instance, some CAG members are in contact with their co-religionists in the United States and South Korea, and their main leaders live abroad, which can be easily interpreted as “collusion” under article 8(1). CAG refugees continue their religious activities abroad after escaping from China, and others join the CAG abroad. Once they return to China, they might be arrested and punished with harsher penalties based on article 8(1). Several CAG evangelists are itinerant preachers, who move across provinces, thus falling under article 8(2). We also personally met refugees who, when in China, were state employees, including police officers, which calls for a heavier penalty under article 8(5). And certainly, all members of the CAG have continued their religious activities after their religion was listed as a xie jiao in 1995 and banned, thus falling under the provision of article 8(4).

Article 9 deals with repentant or “re-educated” xie jiao members:

Where the organization or exploitation of xie jiao to undermine the implementation of State laws or administrative regulations, meets the requirements of article 4 of this Interpretation, but the perpetrators can truly repent and clearly demonstrate that they have left the xie jiao and will not again engage in xie jiao activities, they may be not prosecuted or have punishment waived. Of these, where the perpetrator was deceived or coerced into participating in the xie jiao, it may be handled other than as a crime.

Where those organizing or exploiting xie jiao to undermine the implementation of State laws or administrative regulations, can truly repent and clearly demonstrate that they have left the xie jiao before the first-instance trial judgement, and will not again engage in xie jiao activities; it is to be handled according to the following discrete situations:

(1) Where the circumstances of article 2 of this Interpretation are met, it may be determined to be ‘more minor circumstances’ as provided for in the first paragraph of Criminal Law article 300;
(2) Where the circumstances of article 3 of this Interpretation are met, it may be determined that it is not ‘especially serious circumstances’ as provided for in the first paragraph of Criminal Law article 300; and given between three- and seven-years imprisonment and a concurrent fine.

Cases show that the application of this provision is not generous. Confession is not enough. It is mentioned as an “alleviating circumstance” but in practice the penalty is often the same applied to co-defendants who did not confess. Even promising to abandon one’s faith is mentioned in the decisions, but often does not significantly alter the penalties.

Case Law: A Study of 200 Cases of CAG Members Sentenced Under Article 300

Chinese authorities are performing a sustained effort to digitalize and make available online PRC court decisions. Given the size of China, so far only a percentage of the decisions, particularly of the older ones, is available. Nonetheless, the data base China Judgments Online, managed by the Supreme People’s Court, is an impressive achievement, with 42,7 million pages of judgments uploaded as of February 2018 (Yu and Du 2018). As presented on the webpages of China Judgments Online, as of August 2019, there are 74,625,133 court decisions published, including decisions on 8,561,886 criminal cases. Refugees sometimes bring abroad with them copies of court decisions in their own cases, but the publication in the official China Judgments Online automatically solves any problem of authenticity.

Navigating the data base is not easy for those who are not Chinese lawyers or judges themselves. We limited our search to (a) cases concerning members of the CAG; (b) sentenced on the basis of article 300; (c) in the year 2018 and in the first seven months of 2019 (January–July), thus clearly after the official Interpretation of 2017; and (d) sentenced to imprisonment of 3 years or more. Although further research may surely discover additional cases, we found more than 200 individual CAG members who were thus sentenced under article 300 between January 2018 and July 2019 in the data base. The number of decisions is smaller, since the same decision may punish more than one individual. Obviously, this does not mean that only 200 odd CAG members were tried in China during the period we considered. As mentioned earlier, not all decisions find their way to the data base.
At the end of this paragraph, we offer a list of 200 cases we selected. Some may find them repetitious, but we should not forget that each name corresponds to a person who is spending years in Chinese jails, where conditions for inmates have been denounced as unacceptable by international observers (see e.g. U.S. Department of State 2019a).

From the list, we notice the predominance of female CAG members sentenced (158 out of 200), which confirms that there are more women than men in the CAG in general (Introvigne 2020). We would not insist on the differences between “using” and “organizing” a xie jiao “to sabotage the implementation of the law,” since where the border lies is unclear, and very often does not lead to different penalties.

All decisions present detailed personal information, including when the CAG members joined the Church, what position they held, what specific activities they performed (see the 200 cases listed below), what spiritual books, videos, and electronic texts they kept in their homes, etc. These decisions also show a correct understanding of the CAG’s hierarchical structure, and use CAG’s usual terminology. The CAG distinguishes between church leaders (dai ling), sub-district leaders, and district leaders, appointed on the basis of the number of CAG members in the corresponding areas. A “church leader” normally oversees a community including at least twenty, but less than fifty, members. If the group grows to exceed fifty, a separate community is established under a new “church leader.” Sub-district and district leaders oversee a plurality of churches. There are also provincial leaders, and leaders in charge of more than one province, but none was among the 200 of our list. One would expect that district leaders would get more severe penalties than church leaders, but this is not always the case.

Through the decisions, we also discovered the importance of those the courts call “liaisons” or “district liaisons,” i.e. CAG members responsible of delivering messages and documents from one church to another within a district. Another category of sentenced CAG members were said to work in “district logistic,” printing clandestinely or photocopying faith-related materials, binding them, transferring them to memory cards, as well as head-counting the members and keeping track of the donations received. Those working in these capacities were regarded as no less dangerous than church leaders, and received similar penalties. Several church members, including Ms. Yu Tianxia, Ms. Wang Baoyu, and Ms.
Jiang Liangjiao, were sentenced to 7 years in jail merely for delivering messages of the CAG.

What did CAG members do to be sentenced under article 300? The study of the cases confirms that police and courts try to identify and punish church leaders and district leaders, but also go after ordinary members. They are sentenced for different reasons. First, they try to convert others. In several cases, trying to convert relatives is enough to be sentenced—in these cases, relatives hostile to the CAG would normally testify against the defendant. For instance, one Ms. Li Yanming was sentenced to three years, plus four years of probation (in which she would be submitted to constant surveillance), for having tried to convert her relatives, despite having confessed and promised to renounce her faith. Ms. Li Shixiu also got three years for having tried to convert her relatives and neighbors, as did Ms. Shi Min for having brought her missionary message to unsympathetic neighbors.

Courts also apply the detailed tables of the 2017 official interpretation to assess penalties against those who kept at home flyers, books, videos, and CDs. The decisions show that this is a serious problem for CAG members. The CAG is a “religion of the book,” or books, and every CAG member possesses at least one book of the Church, but if one is caught keeping CAG books at home, harsh penalties will follow. Here, however, as in other cases, penalties are imposed somewhat capriciously. It is not surprising that two female district leaders who oversaw the production of more than 13,000 pieces of CAG literature, Ms. Mo Xiufeng and Ms. Wu Lin, got 9 and 8 years respectively. However, keeping smaller quantities of CAG literature is often enough to go to jail. Mr. Liu Zhaopu kept at home 334 CAG books, plus 1 laptop, 6 TF cards, and 72 CDs containing CAG materials. He was also accused of trying to convert others, and was sentenced to three and a half years in jail.

CAG members know the law too, and we see them struggling to find where they may safely store the books and brochures without being caught and sentenced. Several decisions punished CAG members who participated in storage plans, where books printed clandestinely were divided and placed in the home of different devotees. The decision of March 14, 2019 against one Mr. Li Chuanyou is emblematic. It seems he did not commit any other crime than taking a shovel and helping CAG members dig secret underground cellars where the books would be stored. That costed him three years in jail, plus three of probation, after having been forced to admit his crime and write a “statement of repentance.”

Note that article 300 is applied even when there is no evidence that books and brochures were distributed to others. Carrying, or keeping them at home, is enough. Ms. Zhang Qingyun was boarding a plane, when she was found out to carry with her 5 SD cards and 1 MP4 player containing CAG-related books and information. She was sentenced to three years in jail. Both Ms. Song Lanying and one Ms. Sun were sentenced to four years in jail for storing hundreds of religious books and some DVDs of the CAG in their homes.

The CAG is well-known for shooting religious videos. Although most of them are produced abroad, the decisions reveal that some are made in China. The courts punished people who participated in the production of films in various capacity. Screenwriters were regarded as more dangerous (Mr. Liu Junhua, Mr. Wu Baozhen, and Mr. Yao Shuzhong all got ten years — although in the case of Ms. Jiang Ying and Ms. Wang Meiqing the fact that they confessed for once did make a difference, and they both got three years only, plus five years of probation). Actors got lesser penalties, although some of them also participated in the filming process, including Ms. Du Xiaojin, who was sentenced to three years and six months. But three years and six months seems to be the standard for having performed in a CAG movie, as confirmed by the cases of Mr. Ji Chunlei, Ms. Li Mei, Ms. Li Yuan, Ms. Lu Meiqin, Ms. Shao Xuemei, Mr. Sun Fengpan, Ms. Yang Jinfang, Ms. Yang Limin, and Mr. Yong Huacheng.

The formula “participated in the filming” is more ambiguous, and may refer to both important roles in the production of a movie such as director or assistant director, or lesser tasks. Mr. Wang Huaixiang and Ms. Wang Jinzi both got five and a half years. Ms. Zhu Chunyan, Mr. An Qinzheng, Ms. Li Huanqiao, and Ms. Zhu Tiantian also “participated in the filming” of CAG religious videos and got three years plus either three or four years of probation, with confessions and promises to renounce their faith working in their favor as alleviating circumstances.

Camera operators such as Ms. Jia Haicheng and Mr. Wang Zongyao got three years plus additional years of probation, even though both confessed and promised to renounce their faith. Working as a make-up artist for the CAG movies was not taken lightly by the courts either, and costed both Ms. Guo Eryan and Ms. Wang Juan three years and a half in jail. In fact, as reported to us by one CAG leader, make-up artists also try to make actors unrecognizable, in order to protect them from prosecution, sometimes disguising male actors as women and vice versa (Ms. Zou Demei, personal interview, New York, June 10, 2019).

Besides videos, CAG members produce testimony texts, which are shared with co-religionist and prospective converts throughout the world, and often published online. When these texts come from China, they may include details of persecution and torture. As they are spread abroad, they further damage the already compromised image of human rights in China. Those who participate in these activities are severely punished by the courts. Coordinating the writing of testimony articles was an important factor in the sentencing of Ms. Li Fengying to a term of three and a half year in jail. On November 13, 2015, Ms. Zhu Guangjuan was sentenced to 3 years in jail for being active in the CAG, with 3 years of probation. She was later convicted of continuing her CAG activities, and for having sent a report about her arrest and interrogation to CAG members overseas during her probation. She got a fine of 3,000 RMB and 6 and a half years in jail, to be added to the previous 3 years.

As most other religions do, the CAG regularly organizes worship and study meetings. Groups persecuted as xie jiao are forbidden to do this in China. We know from our interviews with refugees that they sometimes gather in the cellars, fields or forests to avoid detection, but this is not possible everywhere, and in some provinces the winter is very cold. They move frequently, and rent new homes and apartments to avoid detection. Ms. Long Cuiping was sentenced to three years for assisting CAG members in renting houses. The fact that she confessed, and promised to have nothing more to do with the CAG in the future, was mentioned as a mitigating circumstance.

Most meetings take place in the homes of believers, where religious materials can be distributed outside of the gaze of the omnipresent surveillance cameras (as far as we know, so far only in Xinjiang the police installed surveillance cameras even inside the homes of Uyghurs and members of other Muslim minorities). A significant number of decisions punished CAG believers who hosted meetings in their homes (and normally committed the additional crime of distributing books and brochures there). Ms. Wang Jinrui kept 5 books and 184 brochures of the CAG, and organized four meetings in her home, for which she was sentenced to a jail penalty of five and a half years. She got a harsher penalty because she had already been previously kept in custody for 15 days for attending CAG meetings. Mr. Li Gang got five years and 6 months for attending four meetings in the home of a co-religionist, as he had been sentenced to 3 years in jail for participating in CAG activities before, and the court thus determined that he was a recidivist felon. These meetings do not need to be large. Ms. Han Su’e was sentenced to four years for having hosted two CAG members in her home and participated in small worship meetings with them.

The meetings in the home of Ms. Yang Xuerong were probably well attended, as she deemed it fit to keep there a supply of 1,627 CAG books. The price she paid was four years and three months in jail.

CAG believers often distribute their literature and videos as files via the Internet, using VPN to circumvent censorship, or put them in small memory cards, to avoid been caught transporting or storing at home more visible boxes of books or DVDs. But caught they are nonetheless, and sentenced for this. Ms. Xu Guixiang and Ms. Xiao Guorong were both sentenced to five and a half years for having shared CAG materials in this way (Xiao was also convicted for sending reports to CAG leaders). Their male co-religionist, Mr. Yu Hai, got seven and a half years for having shared CAG video, audio, and text materials. Using memory cards for storing and delivering CAG-related materials is mentioned in various decisions, and Ms. Wang Fang’e was sentenced to three years for purchasing and repairing memory cards and MP4 players intended to be used by CAG members.

CAG is a missionary religion. Almost all members “preach the gospel,” as they say, and try to convert others. This puts them at risk, because those who do not like their missionary approach may report them to the police (and pocket the rewards offered to those who denounce a member of a xie jiao: see Introvigne 2020).

In most courts, three years seems a standard penalty for having tried to convert others to the CAG (see the cases of Ms. Guo YanLing, Ms. Tu Yurong, Mr. Liu Shengyou, Ms. Li Shixiu and others; Mr. Niu Yueting got three years and six months), although one Ms. Wu Youjin got seven years, perhaps because her missionary activity was too successful. Here, again, confessions and declarations to renounce the faith did not always grant significant benefits: Mr. Liu Shengyou confessed but got three years, just like others who did not confess. Sometimes, sharing the CAG faith within a small personal circle was regarded as even worse than preaching to strangers. Ms. Chen Laiying got five years for evangelizing in her workplace.

A summary of the 200 decisions follows, indicating for each individual sentenced, the last and first name (when indicated in the published decisions: some provide only the last name), the sex, what crimes were imputed to him or her under article 300, the date of the decision, the penalty, and the shortened URL linking to the text of the decision in the China Judgments Online (CJO) database as of September 18, 2019. Unfortunately, these URLs change often. The decisions can always be found through searches based on names and dates, but we have archived the 200 we selected at the address https://cesnur.org/2019/cjo.pdf.

Conclusions

If it was not for the tragic consequences affecting those sentenced, the 200 decisions would look like fascinating ethnographic material on how the CAG members live in China, continuously struggling to hide themselves, their books, and their meetings, yet never renouncing to spread their faith and even shooting movies in their most difficult circumstances. What is of interest here is that their situation can be precisely described as one of constant “fear of persecution,” a fear not imaginary but very much real, as being caught, arrested, and sentenced is a daily, frightening possibility.

What the decisions summarized below confirm is that article 300 is applied to CAG members who perform the most normal religious activities, those typically protected by the international conventions on religious liberty: they print books and flyers, share their faith with relatives, neighbors, and co-workers, send faith-related files to their co-religionists via the Internet, attend worship gatherings, preach their religion. The claim, mentioned above, by Chinese Embassies that “the laws of China and their execution are not punishing the faith of xie jiao members, but rather the anti-society activities born out of their faiths,” is only true if “anti-society activities” is understood to include the most elementary and basic forms of religious life.

These CAG devotees in China are not sentenced for robbing shops to finance their religion, stealing money, abusing women or children, or assaulting and beating opponents. Would they do it, they would be punished by the harsher penalties of the second and third paragraph of article 300. But we did not find any such incident. In our 200 cases, article 300 was always enforced with reference to its first paragraph, dealing with “organizing” or, more often, “using” a xie jiao “to undermine the enforcement of the law,” i.e. to perform illegal activities. The cases demonstrated that attending worship meetings or keeping religious books of a group persecuted as a xie jiao at home, or sharing the faith with a neighbor, are illegal activities in China and are constructed as attempts “to undermine the enforcement of the law.”

Not considering how article 300 really operates in China, courts in democratic countries make tragic mistakes. We would like to conclude this long article with a sober meditation on one of our 200 cases. It concerns Ms. Wang Xiumei, who is precisely a victim of misinterpretation of Chinese law in democratic countries. In 2017, Wang, a CAG asylum seeker in Switzerland, received a deportation order from the Swiss authorities, confirmed up to the Swiss Federal Court (Bundesverwaltungsgericht 2017). They did not believe she was at risk of being arrested in China.

Knowing that forcible deportation would mean that the Chinese police would wait for her at the airport, Wang accepted to return to China spontaneously on May 2, 2017. Once in China, she took the precaution of not returning to her home in Linshu County, Shandong, but instead rented a room in the housing facility of a construction company in the same county. However, in the night of June 27, 2017, the police knocked at her door and arrested her as a member of a xie jiao. On February 9, 2018, the Linshu County People’s Court sentenced Wang to three and a half years in jail under article 300. The verdict made it clear that Wang had been wanted for the crime of “using a xie jiao” for having edited and passed to others material of the CAG. She also kept in her living place 3 laptops including CAG-related files and over 60 CAG books.

Although this goes beyond the matter of interpreting article 300, Swiss authorities also doubted that Wang was really a member of the CAG, as her answers to questions about CAG origins and theology failed to conform to what the Swiss refugee board members and judges had read in biased or outdated Internet sources. In fact, Wang’s answers were correct, while the sources used by the Swiss authorities were wrong. The Chinese judges knew better, and sentenced Wang for being a member of an “editorial group” revising CAG texts for theological correctness. Obviously, she did know CAG theology.

We do not mention the Wang case to blame the Swiss officers and judges. Knowing what is really going on in China is difficult, and until a few years ago the CAG was a virtually unknown group even among scholars. This is precisely why we believe that studying CAG legal cases in China, as well as decisions concerning CAG refugees abroad, is a worthy task for scholars of new religious movements. And it may be one of the rare cases in which scholars would write not for the academia only, but to protect the innocent and save human lives.
